OMAN VOWS TO FOLLOW BUDDHISM.

The first woman to embrace Buddhism publicly in this country received her vows Monday evening at No. 509 Fifth avenue. This convert, whose purpose is to devote years of labor in the far East to uplifting her sex, is the Countess M. de Canavaro, an American, formerly of San Francisco, who, to follow her chosen life, surrenders, as the officiating priest at Monday evening's ceremony announced, family, fortune and title.

The ceremony drew an audience of two hundred men and women of notably high class. At the farther end of the hall was an altar of seven steps, covered with yellow drapery and surmounted and flanked with flowers.

The steps of the altar were symbolical of the Buddhist's idea of the seven stages of human progress to perfection. The lower ones symbolized observation of all things; the second analysis and thorough understanding of all things observed; the third ceaseless energy, the fourth cultivation of happiness, the fifth serenity, the sixth peaceful thought, the last equal mindedness to all. The flowers typified purity.

H. Dharmapala, a Buddhist priest of the Order of the Anagarika, who came to this country as a delegate to the Religious Parliament at the World's Fair, took his place in front of the altar. He wore a flowing gown of yellow, the robe of his order, and carried in his hand three white roses. Behind him came the Countess. She is of middle age, tall and slender, with a mass of black hair, making still more pale by contrast a colorless face. A scarf of white to represent the dress she will wear henceforth, was draped over one shoulder and across her bosom, partially concealing her dress of black silk and lace and the red rose at her throat. Handsome diamonds sparkled at her ears and she held a bunch of red roses.

Dharmapala, in excellent English, and well chosen words, announced the purpose of the gathering and at some length explained Buddhism. This finished, the Countess, with Dr. Alfred Walton at her side, stepped to the priest.

Dharmapala produced a ball of white string. Holding one end he handed the ball to Dr. Walton, who unwound it as he passed among the audience, all of whom were asked by the priest to keep a hand upon the cord, at the same time willing themselves into a mind of peace. Then the other end was handed to the priest, who thus held both ends of the string which nearly everybody in the room was touching. This, it was explained, was to establish a chain of peace, and all present were asked to repeat three times, "Peace to me," and then to follow the priest in thought as he recited in English:—"Peace to every one in this assemblage. Let peace go with her. He called for peace upon the countries of the world, mentioning many of them by name; upon the spirits of good who are helping the world; upon the spirits of darkness who are battling for evil to mankind; upon dumb beasts and upon every living thing.

In this ceremony, he announced, the persons assembled there, linked by the stretched cord, had transmitted peace to the uttermost parts of the earth, and he asked that all surrender themselves to wish loving kindness everywhere. Priest and Countess stood with uplifted face during the interval of silence, then Dharmapala shouted in Pali, the ancient tongue of India, the formula which admitted the woman to the faith she had adopted.

A Valuable Prescription.
Editor Morrison of the Worthington, Ind., "Sun," writes: "You have a valuable prescription in Electric Bitters, and I can cheerfully recommend it for Constipation and Sick Headache, and as a general system tonic it has no equal." Mrs. Annie Stehle, 2025 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, was all run down, could not eat nor digest food, had a backache which never left her and felt tired and weary, but six bottles of Electric Bitters restored her health and renewed her strength. Prices 50 cents and $1.00. Get a Bottle at E. L. Allen's Drug Store.

Still in Pali the woman repeating the words as the priest uttered them were administered the five vows she took. They were:
I pledge to abstain from taking human life.
I abstain from taking anything that does not belong to me.
I abstain from sensual indulgence.
I abstain from untruth and slander.
I abstain from taking alcohol and stupefying drugs.

The Countess de Canavaro was a Buddhist. The religious ceremony was a drama. The convert made a short address, telling of her plans, and then the assemblage was dismissed after the cord which had united it was broken into pieces, of which each person was allowed to take one away.
In a conversation with the Countess she told me she would go to Ceylon to work for the elevation of women and girls there. She will sail to-morrow by the American line, traveling as far as Paris with Dharmapala, who goes to attend the Oriental Congress in that city. Her husband, a titled foreigner, she said, would not accompany her and she would leave a son in college in this country.
She was brought up a Roman Catholic, she explained, and about ten years ago became a theosophist, but sought further and found what she had craved in Buddhism. After she felt that she had accomplished some good in Ceylon, she said, she should return to this country to pursue similar work among the women here.—[N. Y. Herald.

MEDICINE.

In all the wide range of human sorrow there is no more pitiful tragedy than that of the death of a mother at childbirth. It cuts off a life just at the moment when it has achieved its greatest duty and at the very outset of its greatest happiness. It leaves a helpless, motherless babe to the care of a father who has no blood interest in its welfare, and as a Sister of Charity or a nurse may be they cannot replace the love and ministrations of a mother. This ever recurring tragedy could be avoided if women would heed the vital importance of preserving the health and vigor of the delicate organs that bear the burdens of maternity. The woman who neglects weakness and disease of these organs is unfitted for motherhood and it only holds out to her the cruel and agonizing pain and possible death, which she would have avoided if she had heeded the warnings of the organs that bear the burdens of maternity. It is prepared for motherhood and disease of these organs strongly, healthy and by taking during the period preceding pregnancy Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.
